Many US universities and colleges use SAT scores as a means of assessing a student's preparation for higher education. Recently, the use of SAT scores in college applications has been hotly debated, with some critics arguing that the test should be eliminated from the college admissions process entirely. However, many admission offices in top-ranked US colleges and universities strongly believe that SAT scores are still a good measure of an applicant's potential to overcome the academic rigors of higher education. And most of these admission offices argue that SAT scores allow them to confidently and easily predict a student's ability to succeed at their universities. Thus, the higher your child's SAT score is, the better the chance that your child will not only get accepted to their dream school but they could also be considered for merit-based scholarships. And the tried and tested way for your child to obtain a high SAT score is by enrolling your child in an SAT prep course. However, there are many SAT prep courses out there, and it might all seem overwhelming figuring out which to choose. To help you make the best purchasing decision, we have thoroughly reviewed the top SAT online prep courses and classes on the market, to guarantee that your child is equipped with the best resources for success.
